

My reflections on Chris Lubbe

When Chris Lubbe came to school, he told us his life story and it deeply inspired me. He impressed me because he decided to go against the law to get what's right. He also taught himself to read and started a library with over 900 books that he found from the dump. His only rule was to tell him what the books were about. The advice from ~~I~~ I will follow is 'anybody can be anything they want to be' because ~~I~~ that it is important because lots of people don't have self belief. One day they may be a multi-millionaire even though they were positive about not being rich. Chris taught me that no matter how bad things are, they can always come right again. For example when the policemen ~~through~~ ^{threw} his mother on the floor and put her in a coma for three and a half months. She eventually woke up and everything was good again. I ~~felt~~ feel this that Chris deeply inspired me with his perseverance through his awful life and the way that he dealt with them too. I ~~thing~~ think he is an amazing person. He has been the bodyguard of Nelson Mandela, met the Queen and sung with ~~not~~ Michael Jackson.
