

Chris Lubbe

On Friday 16th June, Chris Lubbe came into our school to talk to us about racial discrimination. He had worked as Nelson Mandela's bodyguard for a period of time but, before that he had been through many scary and horrible things.

Chris has inspired me because, despite the many things that he has experienced, he still had the courage to tell us about his life and how he stood up for what is right. Since he came in it has really changed the way that I think because now I can see that everyone is the same so, therefore, we should all be treated equally no matter what we look like.

When Chris was telling us about his life it made me feel very sorry for him and I also felt sad because no-one should have to go through what he has been through. I feel bad because we get lots of things such as: education, clean water, well-structured houses and good food whereas Chris and others in South Africa during apartheid didn't have anything like that.
